Turned out the ram stick was not properly inserted I fixed the RAM problem but another problem came up.. Windows Media Center's great interface and huge compatibility list with various TV standards and media file formats made it a great media center already, but Microsoft sweetened the deal with DVR and TV tuner capabilities, as well as network play and syncing with smartphones and portable media players.. I asked my uncle what it was and he told me It was probably infected with a virus and was best to re-install Windows XP Media Center Edition 2005.

I've been looking every where but no luck Found an old dinosaur(HP Pavillion) in my house the other day an wasn't working from a while back(I think since 07) and decided to fix it.. (Remember its been a while since I turned it on)I selected start windows normally but showed the windows loading screen for like two seconds and gives me a blue screen.
